“Designing space for your lifestyle.”

A modern kitchen featuring a combination of white and grey cabinetry. The upper cabinets include glass-fronted sections displaying dishes. The backsplash is made of light-colored, rectangular stone tiles. A stainless steel range hood is mounted above the cooktop. A large, white, conical pendant light hangs over the island. The island has a white countertop and is accompanied by two wooden bar stools with black seats. The floor is covered in large, light-colored square tiles.

CONTEMPORARY STYLE

Contemporary styles are extremely versatile for almost any home. Striped wood grains, zero sheen finished engineered veneers, super high gloss finishes, whites, greys, soft beiges, bright and intense colours, floating cabinets; so many styles and options.

TRANSITIONAL STYLE

Transitional style is a blend of traditional and contemporary styles, finishes and materials. Transitional designs have clean lines, simple door styles, modern pull hardware, mixed cabinet finishes and many other elements which create a complementary balance that is unique to the homeowner's personal taste.

A detailed view of a traditional kitchen. The cabinetry is white with raised panel doors and glass-fronted upper cabinets displaying colorful glassware. A large, ornate white range hood with a decorative circular medallion is centered above the stove. The countertop is a speckled granite, and a large island in the foreground is also topped with granite. The island is set with plates, glasses, and a fruit basket. In the background, a sink with a modern faucet and a vase of yellow tulips are visible.

TRADITIONAL STYLE

Victorian, Georgian, Colonial, Cape Cod, Early American or even Shaker, are all familiar titles that represent the true identity of traditional styles. Rich wood finishes, raised panel doors, antique finishes, turned posts, large over-mantle style range hoods, multi-level crown mouldings, French mullion glass doors and many more embellishments. Traditional style is the definition of formal, timeless elegance and classic beauty.
